BYU fans again accused of using racial slurs

Josh Peter
USA TODAY

University of Southern Cal women's soccer players said BYU fans directed racial slurs at them last year after USC players kneeled during the national anthem before the teams played at BYU, according to a person familiar with the situation who spoke to USA TODAY Sports on the condition they not be identified because of the sensitivity of the situation.

The USC players said BYU fans chanted, "Stand up, n-word" in reaction to USC players kneeling during the anthem before the game on Aug. 26, 2021, according to the person.

On Friday, the Guardian reported that five soccer players from a visiting team told the newspaper they heard the N-word being directed at them and their teammates from the crowd during a game at BYU in 2021. The players and the school were not identified in the story.

The allegations come about five weeks after Rachel Richardson, a Black volleyball player at Duke, said BYU fans subjected her to racial slurs during the Duke-BYU match in Provo, Utah, on Aug. 26 this year.

They volleyball match, won by BYU, was played in front of 5,507 spectators, the largest crowd to watch a women's volleyball match at the school, according to BYU. The soccer game, won by BYU, was played in front of 5,347, a larger-than-normal crowd for a women's soccer game at the school.

Jon McBride, associate athletic director for communications and media strategy at BYU, told USA TODAY Sports he was referring to alleged use of the N-word when in a statement he responded, "The Guardian's inquiry is the first time we heard this specific concern. The night of the match, which occurred over a year ago, BYU responded to a concern from a visiting coach about fan reaction when the visiting players knelt during the national anthem.

"A public announcement, similar to one made earlier, reminding fans to be respectful was repeated, and the game proceeded. We are not aware of any additional concerns being brought up during the game or any time thereafter. BYU will not tolerate racism in any form."

McBride referred questions about confirming the players' allegations to USC. Members of USC's athletic communication department did not immediately respond to a request for comment from USA TODAY Sports.

Hannah White, a senior forward for USC who was one of the players who kneeled at BYU, said she didn't hear fans use the N-word but about four of her teammates told her they did. She said players closer to the other end of the starters lineup were those who reported hearing the slur.

"I know it was definitely said," White told USA TODAY Sports. "I just didn't hear it. I think when multiple teammates come up and they're talking about it, I don't think they would make that up."

The USC players spoke to the Guardian in part to support Richardson after BYU announced it had completed an investigation into Richardson's allegations and found no evidence to corroborate, according to the person who spoke to USA TODAY Sports.

Isabela Rolley, a junior defender at USC last year, reported the allegation to Keidane McAlpine, then head coach at USC, after the national anthem was played. McAlpine relayed the complaint to BYU head coach Jennifer Lockwood, who informed event staff before an announcement was made over the PA system.

McBride provided video of the BYUtv broadcast of the game and cited the time the coaches discussed the alleged incident and conferred with event staff.

Rolley said she only heard the crowd booing and chanting "Stand up!" But she said about four teammates told her the crowd was using the N-word and she then informed McAlpine.

"He's like, 'Do you think people want to cancel the game? And I was like, 'I don't think anyone doesn't want to play this game because it was really big for our (NCAA) tournament hopes.

"He was like, 'OK, I'm going to speak to their staff and see where we go from there.'"

Gloria Nevarez, commissioner of the West Coast Conference – which includes BYU – said BYU notified her about the allegations in the Guardian story the day before it was published.

"BYU is currently looking into the matter with the same level of diligence as the prior incident," Nevarez told USA TODAY Sports but did not identify the school involved in the allegations. "We've not yet gotten to the point of understanding what next steps should be as information is still coming in."

The Pac-12, which includes USC, has been made aware of the alleged incident, the conference said in a statement.

"We have been made aware of the alleged incident and look forward to reviewing the findings of the WCC's investigation of the matter," the Pac-12 said. "Ensuring a safe and secure environment, free of racism or abuse of any kind for our student-athletes is of the highest priority for the Pac-12."

WNBA 1st-rounder-Texas legend Jackson dies at 37

Analís Bailey
USA TODAY

Tiffany Jackson, a Texas women's basketball legend who was drafted fifth overall in the 2007 WNBA draft, died Monday after a battle with breast cancer, the school announced. She was 37.

Jackson played at the University of Texas under Hall of Fame head coach Jody Conradt from 2003 to 2007. In her first year, Jackson was named the National Freshman of the Year by the U.S. Basketball Writers Association and Big 12 Freshman of the year.

"Tiffany had a great career and was an impact player," Conradt said. "She was recognized for her all-around game and the fact that she was tremendously mobile and could play multiple positions. She was beloved by teammates, and we share in the sadness of her passing."

Jackson was a three-time All-American and was first-team all-conference three times at Texas. She led the Longhorns to the NCAA Sweet 16 during her rookie campaign. She is the only person in program history to have achieved a combined 1,000 points, 1,000 rebounds, 300 steals and 150 blocks.

Found near the top of Longhorn Basketball record books, Jackson was selected by the New York Liberty and played three full seasons there before getting traded to Tulsa during her fourth. Playing with the Tulsa Shock through 2015, she was diagnosed with stage 3 breast cancer. Jackson left the WNBA in 2016, returned in 2017 with the Los Angeles Sparks and retired at 32. She served as assistant coach at Texas for two years.

"We are deeply saddened to hear the news of the passing of Tiffany Jackson, one of the greatest players in the history of Texas women's basketball," Texas head coach Vic Schaefer said. "From her days as a player for DFW Elite to her days as a player at The University of Texas, Tiffany has meant so much to so many people in this great state of Texas. I know she was so excited to be the head coach at Wiley College for the upcoming season. She will be sorely missed by so many. Our deepest sympathies go out to her family."
