Roblox Adds Parental Controls for Safety

Videogame maker has denied that it doesn't do enough to protect children

By Sarah E. Needleman

Roblox is adding more protections to its platform for its youngest users, a move that comes about a month after short-selling firm Hindenburg Research accused the videogame company of favoring growth over child safety.

San Mateo, Calif.-based Roblox said new parental controls and gatekeeping features that launched Monday were planned and in development long before Hindenburg released its report. The company has denied the firm's allegations, which include that it inflates the user metrics it shares with investors.

The safeguards Roblox is adding include the ability for parents to create their own Roblox daily active users by accounts that link to their children's accounts, allowing them to set daily usage limits, block access to specific game genres and more.

Games also will get ratings similar to movies that are based on the kind of content they contain so parents can more easily determine which ones they are comfortable letting their children play. In addition, users under 13 will no longer be allowed to text chat outside of games. They already can't voice chat.

Roblox said the latest updates are significant because parents will now be able to manage how their children engage with the platform on their own devices. Previously, parents needed to log into their children's accounts to adjust the settings as they saw fit. Roblox said it plans to communicate more openly about the work it does in this area to better protect its repu-moderation technology, including artificial intelligence.

In August, Roblox was blocked in Turkey for allegedly having content that exploits children. The company has said it is working with local authorities to resolve the it is planning to open an office

Other tech companies with platforms popular among minors have recently launched safety-related initiatives. In September, Meta Platforms began automatically making vouth accounts on Instagram private, and it added features that prevent younger teens from changing settings or creating adult accounts with fake birth dates.

The changes by Roblox and Meta come as legislators and regulators around the globe have been pushing tech companies to do more to protect children from predators. harmful content and addictive algorithms.

Earlier this year, the Senate passed legislation requiring technology companies to take steps to shield children from harmful content on the internet, though the bills face an uncertain fate in the House matter, and a spokesman said because of concerns about free speech.

> The Kids Online Safety Act and the Children and Teens' Online Privacy Protection Act require companies to provide children under 17 with the strictest-possible guardrails on their platforms as a default. If the two bills become law, they would mark Congress's first major new regulation of children's internet use in decades.

> State legislators around the country are seeking to regulate teen smartphone use and are looking at introducing bills that would require app stores to verify the age of users.

Roblox, founded in 2004, operates a free platform with millions of games and other experiences, all of which are made by its own users. The company went public via a direct listing in 2021. Roblox had 88.9 million daily users as of the end of September, with 40% under the age of 13.

Xiaomi's Earnings Exceed Estimates on Robust Sales

By Jiahui Huang

Xiaomi reported betterthan-expected net profit in the third quarter on strong sales across its business segments, including smartphones, internet services and electric vehicles.

The Chinese maker of smartphones and other consumer electronics has logged robust sales in its new EV business since it launched its first car in late March. In a Weibo post on Monday, Chief Executive Lei Jun said the Xiaomi SU7 series exceeded the delivery target of 100,000 units and the company will focus on hitting its annual target of 130,000 cars.

Xiaomi's Hong Kong-listed shares have reflected the EV segment's promising growth, soaring more than 80% this year, eclipsing the benchmark Hang Seng Index's 15% gain. The company's stock also has been buoyed by the solid performance of its Internet-of-Things segment at home and

Its smartphone sales, meanwhile, grew healthily in the third quarter, with shipments rising 3.3% to 42.8 million units, helping it maintain its position as the No. 3 seller of smartphones worldwide, according to preliminary data from IDC, a closely watched industry tracker. Xiaomi on Monday reported a 9.9% increase in net profit to 5.35 billion yuan, equivalent to $740 million, better than the

4.47 billion yuan estimated by analysts in a Visible Alpha poll. After adjusting for share-based compensation and other items, its quarterly profit was 6.25 billion yuan, up 4.3% from a year

The Beijing-based company's revenue rose 30% to 92.51 billion yuan, it said. Sales from its smartphone business, its biggest revenue driver, climbed 14% to 47.5 billion yuan.

Revenue from its IOT and lifestyle product segment, which includes tablets, television sets and laptops, jumped 26% to 26.1 billion yuan. .

Revenue from internet services increased 9.1% to a record 8.5 billion yuan as monthly active user numbers rose to record highs in its domestic and overseas markets.

Xiaomi generated 9.7 billion yuan in revenue from its EV business in the third quarter, with the segment's gross profit margin improving to 17.1% from 15.4% in the second quarter.
